I've attended many TI events including ones on the topics of sanctity of life, moral coherency, personalism, social advocacies, advanced Citizen Advocacy issues, human service violence, history of human services, reflections on 35 years in human services, language, liberation, 'two intelligences, 'advanced Social Role Valorization, analysis of rights, wounds and deathmaking, what happens to vulnerable people in times of disaster and societal stress, Christian sanctity of life, and how to operate in an era of dwindling resources and financial constraints.

In regard to what the TI has meant for me, I'm not even sure where or how to start. Wolf personally, and the Training Institute (TI) broadly, has set the direction for much of my work and studies, and has indirectly at least introduced me to so many of my long-term relationships. I have many memories of time spent at the TI offices; among my favorites are staying at Wolf and Nancy's house and receiving such wonderful hospitality, sitting at a table with Wolf while he edited a PASSING report that I was writing, and of course the famous TI activity of 'garbage-ing' ... looking for usable items discarded by Syracuse University students.
